New processors you say...

No sooner do we get a new OS to use, our illustrious leader drops another bombshell with his Developer Conference keynote announcement of new Intel processors for our favorite computers. That could well cost the entire Mac Community huge sums of money over the next few years. Not the least of which will be the developers.

The July 7th release from Apple could answer some questions about the trend of the next few years.

I think Stan made a very practical move with his recent purchase of a new G5 PowerMac. I may reconsider my plans in the very near future.

The newest defacto rule in the world of Macintosh is that when you purchase a new Mac you will need to update any utility software that boots to run. ie: DiskWarrior and others.

Pod Casting seems like the latest rage and Bob Shayler will have a major update on that subject.

Tiger update 10.4.2 is still being worked on but is expected in the very near future. Stay tuned to Randy. He always gets the latest word.

That's all folks...
